Messenger. Molecular cloning, expression and catalytic activity of a novel human UTP-glucose pyrophosphorylase. We report the isolation and characterization of a human cDNA encoding a UDP-glucose pyrophosphorylase. Analysis of the deduced amino acid sequence suggests that the human enzyme contains a single catalytic subunit which is larger than the catalytic subunit of the yeast enzyme, and that it is also larger than the catalytic subunit of the plant enzyme. This difference is due to the presence of an additional 116 residues near the N terminus of the human enzyme. However, the human enzyme also contains a N-terminal sequence and two potential N-glycosylation sites which are not present in the yeast enzyme. The human enzyme is expressed in Escherichia coli, and catalyzes the transfer of glucose-1-phosphate from UTP to glucose-1,6-diphosphate to form UDP-glucose. Q: CSS3

Animation: Transforming an element with a custom function for its x and y position I am trying to do something a bit unusual. I would like to animate a rotated element, that is located at a certain x and y position. I want to rotate it, but that its position is not static and depends on the x and y position of the pointer. So here's what I mean: Imagine you have a black box on the screen, which is drawn with the background color black. You move your mouse around, and a red circle is being drawn. That circle should also get black background when it's outside of the black box. Here is what I tried: `body { background-color: black; } .circle { height: 100px; width: 100`
