To compare preterm infant mortality in Chile and Brazil and evaluate its historical changes over 40 years. We reviewed the most recent literature on preterm birth in Latin America and compared the data of Chile and Brazil. Preterm birth is the main cause of death in preterm infants. Although Chile has a more advanced health system than Brazil, Chilean neonatal mortality (in 1986) was similar to that in Brazil (9.5 per 1000 live births). Our data show that Chilean preterm infant mortality has been increasing since the 1970s. The rate of preterm infants in the Chilean population was 1% in 1962, 3% in 1980 and 8% in 1997. In Brazil, these rates were 15%, 28% and 41%, respectively. The maternal mortality rate in Chile, 8 per 100,000 live births, was less than half that of Brazil, 21.5 per 100,000. The use of tocolytic agents is a significant factor in decreasing preterm birth, as is antenatal screening and prevention of infections and intrauterine growth restriction. Preterm birth is a leading cause of infant mortality in both Chile and Brazil. Health systems in both countries must establish a goal of complete in utero prevention.1755 births Category:1803 deaths Category:Barons of the United Kingdom peerage Oliver Category:Earls of Buckinghamshire Category:Lord-Lieutenants of Essex Category:Knights Companion of the Order of the Bath Category:People educated at The Crypt School Category:Royal Navy personnel of the French Revolutionary Wars Category:Royal Navy personnel of the Napoleonic Wars Category:Royal Navy personnel of the War of the Spanish Succession Category:Royal Navy admirals17 Seventeen

Evidence is reviewed for the relationship between the microbial glycolysis system and the health of the immune system. This relationship is complex and involves the cell-mediated immune response, the humoral immune response, and the brain-endocrine-immune-immune responses. Glycolysis is directly involved in inducing an immune response, as well as creating an acidic microenvironment for the development of cytotoxic T lymphocytes (CTLs). The importance of glycolysis in human CTL development is highlighted. The well-studied induction of hypoxia appears to potentiate the function of CTLs by inducing a site-specific CTL maturation process. It is demonstrated that the main effect of the induction of hypoxia is to create a focal acidic microenvironment with a pH less than 6.5, an effect that may be crucial for the CTL maturation process. The relative function of the glycolysis system is also discussed. You are here The Eudora Wel 3e33713323
