This year's FIFA developers are attempting to deliver a more complete, authentic football experience by collecting, analyzing and using more game data than ever before. Enjoy our latest EA SPORTS FIFA 20: Intro Pack screen for a quick look at some of the changes and improvements we're making to the game. How does HyperMotion Technology work? We've developed a highly detailed, 100-player motion capture suit, which allows us to capture the unique movement patterns of real players on the pitch. The motion capture suit uses 51 discreet markers, which make it possible to record each player's physical movement during a complete match. Using just this type of data, we are able to develop a much more realistic football experience, which allows us to create accurate animations for players in each different position. The impact of these animations on gameplay is clear to see. In game, the player feels more connected and agile than ever. What data do we capture? We collect over 100 points of data for each player in each game. This includes data such as the player's body position, the speed of movement, physical effort and physical shape. The collected data helps us to give the player's in-game character their own unique movements that you can only experience in the game. How does this data come together to produce gameplay? All the collected data is used to create animation for on-field actions - such as scoring a goal, heading the ball, passing the ball, dribbling the ball, goal kicks and much more. This allows us to capture and translate each player's natural movement and feeling into gameplay. In addition, we use motion capture data to make decisions that impact gameplay. A new AI-controlled player in FIFA 22 will make smarter, more efficient choices during crucial moments to help create a more realistic, authentic football experience. Why is this data different? It's been a goal of FIFA's creators to create an authentic football experience for players for almost 50 years. We are committed to achieving this. That's why we choose to use the data from real-life players, rather than from computer generated models. Our creators are able to capture the exact motion and feeling of players on the pitch, giving each player a unique character that you can only experience in the game. How can you use this data in game? We can use real-life player data to drive
